Main Ideas: Topic and Concluding Sentences

Part I: Read the paragraphs given below and write the topic and main idea of the paragraph.

1. Algorithms increasingly shape the way people access information and experience the online world. Every day, algorithms influence the information people see online. They recommend videos, suggest products, and determine which news stories appear on social media feeds. While these systems make it easier to find relevant content, they can also limit exposure to different viewpoints. Understanding how algorithms influence information can help people become more critical users of digital media.

Main Idea: _____

2. Citizen science is any activity that involves the public in scientific research and thus has the potential to bring together science, policy makers and society as a whole in an impactful way. Citizen scientists are curious or concerned people who collaborate with professional scientists in ways that advance scientific research on topics they care about. Today, citizen scientists come from all walks of life including retirees seeking to socially connect with others while applying their knowledge and experiences in ways that help others, educators and students who want a more hands-on experience outside the classroom and environmental justice advocates who want to see critical data are getting involved. Citizen science encourages people to take a stake in the world around them. As a result, the hope is that this informed public will play a valuable role in influencing larger decisions about science policy.

Topic: _____

Main Idea: _____

3. Home is often associated with a physical place, but for many people it is much more than that. Memories, relationships, language and shared experiences can all create a sense of belonging. Even when people leave their homeland, these connections continue to shape their identity.

Choose the statement that best captures the central idea of the paragraph.

☐ The topic is "belonging."

☐ The main idea is that home is more than a physical place because memories and relationships create belonging.

☐ The topic sentence is "Memories, relationships, language, and shared experiences can all create a sense of belonging."

Part II: Effective Topic and Concluding Sentences

1. Which topic sentence best introduces this paragraph?

Many migrants continue to speak their mother tongue at home. They celebrate traditional festivals and maintain connections with family members in their country of origin. At the same time, they learn new customs and languages in their adopted country.

a) Migration often transforms people's identities while allowing them to preserve important aspects of their cultural heritage.
b) People who migrate to another country experience many kinds of change.
c) Cultural traditions play an important role in the lives of migrant communities.
d) Language and festivals help people maintain connections with their culture.

2. Choose the most effective concluding sentence for the paragraph.

Artificial intelligence is changing the way people work, learn, and solve problems. It is becoming part of everyday life. Students use AI tools to brainstorm ideas, professionals rely on them to improve productivity, and businesses use them to analyse large amounts of data. As AI continues to develop, people will need to learn how to use it responsibly.

a) Artificial intelligence is becoming increasingly common in modern society.
b) Learning to use AI thoughtfully will become an essential skill in many areas of life.
c) AI is used by students, professionals, and businesses.
d) Artificial intelligence has both advantages and disadvantages.

3. Choose the most effective concluding sentence for the paragraph.

Podcasts have transformed how many people access information and learning. Podcasts have become a popular way for people to learn about current events, science, history, and entertainment. Their flexibility allows listeners to access information while travelling, exercising, or completing household tasks. As a result, podcasts have expanded opportunities for informal learning.

a) Podcasts cover a wide range of interesting topics.
b) Their accessibility makes podcasts an increasingly valuable resource for lifelong learning.
c) Many podcasts discuss science and history.
d) People often listen to podcasts on their phones.

Part III: Read each paragraph carefully. Write the missing topic sentence and/or concluding sentence.

1. _____

It destroys homes, schools, hospitals, and cities. It also affects people emotionally and mentally. Many people lose family members, friends, and their sense of safety. Communities that once trusted each other may become divided. Even after the fighting ends, fear, anger, and sadness can remain for many years. For people and countries to recover, they must try to rebuild trust, support one another, and work toward peace.

Some people believe that wealthy countries should welcome more refugees and give them safety. Others think that countries have the right to limit the number of refugees they accept. Political leaders, citizens, and governments often disagree strongly on this issue. Some people protest in support of refugees, while others oppose their arrival. Different countries also respond in different ways: some open their borders, while others build walls and fences. Because opinions are so divided, it is important to think carefully about what is fair and humane.

3. Technology has transformed the ways in which people express their identities. A social media profile is one example of this. Through Facebook, Instagram, Twitter/X, or similar platforms, people present themselves to the world. They communicate with others, express opinions, build friendships, join communities, and show their interests and beliefs. In this way, a social media profile becomes more than just an online account. It becomes an important part of how a person exists in society.

4. Indian Americans may have to rethink their identity when they encounter Indian culture in America. Many of them grow up speaking English, going to American schools, and living in American society. Although they may have Indian ancestry, their daily experiences can be very different from people who grow up in India. When they visit or live in India, they may realise that being Indian is not only about family background. It can also involve language, culture, citizenship, and shared experiences.

5. _____

Leaving one's country and starting life in a new place can change a person deeply. Some changes in life are small, such as changing one's hairstyle or getting a new job. Other experiences are much more powerful because they change how people think, what they value, and how they see the world. For example, having a child or falling in love for the first time can change a person's priorities. Migration can have a similar effect. A migrant may have to decide whether to keep the same family roles, community relationships, religious beliefs, or political views they had in their home country. They may also have to adjust to new ways of living and thinking.
